Atkinson's Saturday Evening Post

A FAMILY NEWSPAPER, DEVOTED TO LITERATURE, SCIENCE, MORALITY, NEWS, AGRICULTURE AND AMUSEMENT.

Vol. XV. PHILADELPHIA, FEBRUARY 20, 1836. Whole No. 760.

For the Saturday Evening Post.

THE PASSING YEAR.

As do those deep-treacherous tones,
So sad to be! that subdue the ear
Of lull'd to hope-believe or sense
Some far bourne's any hand or weave
Of ever hazy tale,—more frank upon
Pattern'd the visions of the hour as if
At none, "pale o'sleight on her worry throne,"
Sang slowly finger from the full-closed eye,
Asking to lonely evening—yes, they breathe,
A tone I'd as having time—the doing year!—
All no, those hollow of eternity!—
Ah, never so does the rushing nerslaw wave
The mysterious torment or sickleep
Of bounds, for those whose thou gone and sick
The dim many scenes of the past,—
Whose hope no very yet is restored,
Seems as if but a fleeting sunset's day,
Or as well welcomed face to-whom with joy,
And fondly listened to the airy notion,
Such hopes are not for they,
Whether rage to Time's devouring book!—
Or as the sweet-voiced bird, so melodial such
Thrilled it round,—Twelve times the evening stars
Have holded their nightly vigils, and as oft
Has lid as waning lamp let rest, and in
Oppressed of sleep, the husbandman has sown
Prepared, as ever sunset sank has worn
Its golden hue, and as oft the sweet green,
Autumn's yellow sail—and the rude blast
That swept its fading reading to the earth and laid
Its head upon the genial prime of life—
Has yet to see the end of many a year,
Whether scales of time, a share of which
Has been, a long, and to me, an awful wreath,—
Have no leaving memento to leave!—
And I look back upon the past,
Count the eve of coming years, and show
Fleeting moments, and unnumbered sands
Of time of time!—and soon forgot, for spring
Is in the air, and the summer sun
Grows left lustless by the waning hand,
And soon [illegible] of autumn's glow
Of special to so-called carpet of the mead,
And winter's cold and chilling breath
Summons reader will long[illegible]
Of the [illegible] and then will pass
But a light and rapping wave upon
The heart of those who [illegible]
Or [illegible] monument, a relief on which
Is carved, hand-tear in-like to leave a sight
Sacredo of its power—yes, then time will
Come from heart's check—and wear away
Of the young locks of manhood's pride—
Of its strength—firmer deep upon
Brow, indelible,—the cheerless heart
Sickens chase, and about had, as has
A abode of heaviness, now desolate—
Seek thy truth or blindly wander through
Life in men's—a stone dowed with sightless eyes
Of the world, and it will make no effort
Turn to find thy new acceptance, and to greet
Thee with that smile but can know
Which from heart the hand of God—
And now, my friend, I must bid you
Farewell—for a while—perhaps
Ever long,—another happy year!—

For the Saturday Evening Post.

THE RING;

OR LOVERS' MISTAKES.

[Concluded from our last Number.]

After a night spent in a state somewhat similar to that of the Orlando Furioso under banishment from his mistress, Mr. Frank Hamilton arose from his bed with the determination, and proceeded himself to the same house where he had passed the evening in such a manner, whether what had so disordered him was the effect of intoxication or not, he could not tell. On the top of the house, he made his way to the servant-quarters, and knocked at the door of one of the rooms, "Jane, is that you?" said a female voice from within, "Yes, Miss Lucy," answered Frank, in a low tone of voice, and the door was opened by the lovely girl herself, who, on seeing Frank, was about to close the door again, but he prevented her from doing so, and entered the room. "Miss Lucy," said he, "I have come to ask your forgiveness for my conduct last night, I was intoxicated, and knew not what I was doing." "I will not be the wife and ringing as the waves!" at the thought of being reconciled to a connection so quickly and unexpectedly as any of the intricacies, how [illegible] and [illegible] Frank, and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Saturday Evening Post.

FEBRUARY 26, 1836.

To Readers and Correspondents.

"My Native Land," by T.; "Death of the Wicked Man," by H. H. Ind; "To ——," by Jun, are on file for insertion.

"Lines," by M. A. T.; "Why don't he Come," by Correct; "Lines to Miss ——," by J. E.; "Lines," by W. R. H.; "Lines," by C.; "to Miss A.," by F.; and "The Young Poet's Soliloquy," by Wenger, are on file unread.

In the article from Cambridge, Mr. Mason's Missionary correspondence, we are nothing especially heathenish. In the meantime there is no scarcity of doctrinal and dull christians.

The communique from Harrisburg, probably by a member of the legislature, are dull and stupid in the extreme, and unworthy of such an organ as Solomburg. We have laid them under the table.

The extract from the new play of Alcinoo, we shall endeavour to make room for shortly.

Atlinson's Casket—Next week will be published the February number of the Casket embellished with an elegant colored plate of the newest Fashion, views, &c.

Contents—The Newest Fashions, engr.; Venice Reviewed; Alvino Chantrelle—Phillis Wheatley; Jack Rosebud; An Allegory; Imagination of Women; Education of the Public Schools; Mount Gregory, by M. S. C. Hall; Sketches of the Western Boo—Hon. John Test; The Early Life of Washington; The Mocking Bird; Lacoons, No. IV.; Letters from the South, by Mrs. Hentz; Ireland; Kerlearney; N. York; Thanksgiving; Sketches of England; Wit and Sentiment.

Editors' Port Folio—Life of Washington, in Latin; Rents, by Bubee; Practical Treatise on the Culture of Hair; Decisions of the English and Scotch Law Languages; Carpenter's Family Depository; Parish's Sketches of Literature; Jamieson's History of Greece; Fireworks.

Parlor Annual, May; A New Method of Study; Lines on the Delaware Water Gap; Love; Evening; Hunting by Montgomery; The Indian Chief; What is Earth? The Day Dream.

Mems.—White and Red Roses, arranged for the Piano.

One in a Thousand.—The Harpers, of New York, have just published a handsome edition of the new work by Mrs. Sigourney, in one volume. This work forms the second volume of the cheap edition of new and popular books which the Harpers are sometime since, announced it to be their intention to publish. The merits of "One in a Thousand," are well appreciated by the reading public—its sale exceeds 20 thousand copies. Of a truth it may be said, that in this age, reading is made both easy and cheap.

Japhet in Search of a Father.—This admirable work is now in the press, and will be issued from the Carey & Hart, of this city, having just published the second and last volume. Japhet is one of Captain Marryat's best productions, and we by no means doubt that no one will take it up, without being deeply interested in its powerfully absorbing and skilfully developed plot. This author has struck out for himself a new path,—the one daily popular with the great mass of the community, and one that cannot fail to secure for him an unusual degree of celebrity. We recommend Japhet, to all lovers of light reading, as one of the very best productions of the day.

The Monthly Genesee Farmer.—Mr. Tucker, of Rochester, N. Y. has issued the January and February numbers of a new periodical, under this title, devoted to the interests of the agricultural community. The numbers before us contain a great variety of valuable information on the subject of farming, and from the well known talent and zeal of the editor, we do not doubt but that the Monthly Farmer, will be rendered a most valuable publication. Those who desire to be particularly acquainted with the culture of corn better than subscribe for this, or for the Genesee Farmer, published weekly, at the same office. The price of the Farmer is but 50 cents a year.

Baldwin's Literature.—Another volume of the series of valuable publications under this title, has just been published by Carey, Lea & Blanchard. It is from the pen of the Rev. William Kirby, and its design is to illustrate the power, wisdom and goodness of God as manifested in the creation of animals and in their hearty, habits and instincts. The work is embellished with numerous engravings, and the execution of the text is in every respect powerful and deeply interesting. We regard these treatises as among the most valuable publications of the day.

Similar to the above has just appeared, containing the usual number and variety of accounts, reviews, biographical notices, and foreign and domestic intelligence on medical subjects. We have so frequently spoken in detail of the merits of the publication that an extended notice of the present number appears to be entirely unnecessary. The Review may be said to embrace the first medical authority of this country, and we presume that there are but few physicians in the country, who are not in its regular receipt.

Messrs. Carey, Lea & Blanchard are the publishers.

The Baptism Politic—This is the title of a work just published in the city of Boston. Gregg & Elliot, and Desilver, Thomas & Co. It embraces discourses by the most eminent living divines in England, Scotland and, accompanied with splendid sketches, scriptural illustrations, and selections on the office, duties and responsibilities of the Christian Ministry. It is issued under the editorial supervision of the Rev. Mr. Suddrda, Rector of Grace Church, and fills an elegant octavo of 300 pages.

In the work there are fifty-six sermons, from the ablest British Divines, most of them now living, and as each discourse is different in style, it presents a great variety of style, manner and subject is furnished. The work is by no means sectarian, the editor having selected pieces to make selections of doctrines from all the prominent sects in England. Prefixed to the title is an engraving, containing likenesses of T. Chalmers, R. Hall, H. Ware, T. Raffles, and J. Foster, &c.

The volume altogether, is one possessing much interest to the religious reader, and we have not a doubt of its being extensively read.

Public and Private Economy.—[vol Harper & Brothers. This is a very interesting work from the pen of T. Peyton, Jr. It consists of the value and uses of property—how it may be acquired, how employed in the best advantage, and is written in a very clear and perspicuous style. Political Economy is one of the subjects least understood by the great mass of the reading community, and a treatise so plain and practical application to the various purposes of life, ought to find many attentive readers.

The School, Master, and Advocate or Education.—In a recently published work, the author of which has just been issued by W. Marshall & Co. booksellers, of this city. The editors are J. Frost, Walter R. Johnson, and others. The work is intended for the use of Families, Teachers and Schools —and as such, we have no doubt, it will meet with general favour.

The Knickerbocker.—The February number of this excellent periodical has been received. We have glanced through its pages and find it to be well stored with the spirit and beauty of many of the articles. "Glapthorne," as usual, are rich and spicy. Those papers, generally, are more readable than any others contained in the Magazine. Comparisons are odious, however, where there is so much to praise and admire. The "Editor's Table" is excellent, a new number is issued—new to us—Noah Webster, L. L. D. He has written another one of "Philology." Says," by J. G. Percival, and "A Batch Field by Moonlight," by J. Barker, Esq. are beautiful specimens of poetry. There also, is the "Author at Home," by Button, of the Chestnut street theatre, and one or two excellent stories, which will amply repay a perusal. The price of the number, take it for all in all, is a good one.

Awful Discoveries of Maria Monk.—Here is a work deserving of the meanest censure, when the facts its records be founded in truth; if so, no one will agree with us, in the least degree of palliation for its author. But is it possible that there can be so much wickedness—so much depravity, abroad in the world! Can it be that we number many of the fiends of hell, to rate the most revolting crimes! And that, too, with the utmost impunity! We would have to draw largely upon our credulity to give it a moment's credence. And yet, in glancing through the pages of the book in question, we must confess that it wears at least the semblance of truth; for course, to which we cannot give a name, are alluded to in the fewest possible words, instead of being described in a manner that would lead to deprave the mind, and corrupt the passions, we would probably have been the case, had the writer intended it solely for a pecuniary speculation. But a word or two of Maria Monk, the narrator. It appears that she sought and procured admission into the Hotel Dieu Nunnery, at Montreal, Canada, where she remained five years as a Novice, and two years as a Black Nun. She calls us that the prison, in all respects, connected with the institution, she has nursed, are wicked and profligate; that the females who are admitted as nuns, become their slaves in the worst sense of the word—debasers, upon all occasions, to their will; that the fruits of their misery are instantly destroyed and put out of the way; that, among her various reasons, are frequently murdered; and that she was an eye-witness to the death of one of these—Saint Francis, so called, by the order—which was smothered between two beds by the priests—five in number—and the Lady Superior, because she would not give up a pleasing piece of information of the Reverend Fathers. These are a few of her confessions.

The book has been proved to be a forgery, and the better to discover that it is a translation from an old book in the Spanish language—and its author has been discovered to be the Methodist convertite, of which he pretended to be a mimo-ter.

Since the above was in type, we find the following paragraph, in relation to the "Confessions" in the New York Commercial Advertiser, edited, as every body knows, by Col. Stone, which we think it ought to give a place in our columns:

"Not believing the disclosures to be true, we have taken no notice of this book, which is yet exciting so much of the public attention. We must, however, set out friend of the Philadelphia Gazette right upon one point. The Genesee mare," the work is of course a romance now, in a translation from some old Spanish narrative." Such is not the fact. The writer of the book, who took his name from the Lake of the Genesee country, where herself, is a gentleman of perfect integrity and honor—a man of excellent character and standing—who thought that a story of imprisoned nuns him, would be the last man to impose what he did not honestly believe to be true, on others. This much in justice to an esteemed friend."

Mr. Fower's work on America.—Mr. Power's "Impressions of America," about to be published by Carey, Lea & Blanchard, of this city, will no doubt prove an interesting and popular work. With the specimens we have seen, we have been greatly pleased, and we append a short extract, which, in its way, or tone, than it is amusing in detail. The work will probably be issued next week. The extract relates to Mr. Power's unfortunate theatrical trip, in company with Mr. Jefferson, to Alexandria.

My worthy manager had often pressed me to accompany him, on one of our offsittights, to Alexandria, which he assured me boasted a very pretty theatre and a population, if not generally theatrical, still capable of filling the house for two or three nights, upon extraordinary occasions. Such he was pleased to consider the present; and I, who had never seen the inside of a playhouse during the play-loving Alexandrians had, most likely, during the last very lovely nights, I acted the Waiting Gentleman, Mr. Jefferson, against there yet existed a sufficient body of the opposite sex to make it worth my while to appear with him. At one time, I mounted, and rode down to the city, to make my cadet and receive Washington's orders, for I soon reflected, and the last I should have rejoined, and to have left me to myself, but they would not be moved. The more we waited, the more they would not come. At last, however, about the early part of the forenoon of the second, where, eyed by half a dozen curious boys, who, as is usually the case, had found out a good-humoured air, ready to become admirers, I awaited the appearance of the audience. In lieu of these, some half hour after the time of beginning, Mr. Jefferson made his appearance, with an expression I have seldom seen half come, half weird.

"It is not, my good friend," said he, "that there are not persons who will be present, but they would not be moved. The more we waited, the more they would not come. There are many on the way, but they will not be moved."

"They're a long way off, I guess, if they are," said I.

"And won't arrive in time, that's clear. Hadn't we better postpone our performance, Jack?"

"We've nothing else left for it, I fear," said Mr. J. during a last earnest survey of the well filled "empty salon, adding, "We come down."

"Then, my friend, I'll go to my superfluous," observed I, "unless so far as we ourselves are concerned, and our suits in readiness."

I had observed that two or three little knots occupying the intervals of the pit seats seemed to be in a state of renewed observers of our debate, and grieved and disappointed looks—one of the latter, I think, of them all into the front, and then have acted to them, and to the rest, as the occasion was long anticipated by my near white nose. As it was, Mr. Jefferson had been so accustomed to perfect houses.

"It's provoking, too," added my good humoured manager, who was quite as much disposed to be cool, "for it's a pretty theatre, isn't it?"

"It is a very pretty theatre," I replied. And so it was, for it seemed to be so. Now, time having elapsed, and money ceased to circulate, the blood that was grown sluggish began to flow, and soon came to the fire in me, and the drama's agent fled.

Mr. Jefferson, however, had a more summary mode of accounting for not desolate state; for on my proposing that he should go on with the play, in spite of his noise insufficient—being rather desirous than not to have the chance of trying to come out—he convinced me that all points of "carriage had been most exceedingly well stated for.

"What the plague can be the reason they won't come here for once, at least, Jack?" he exclaimed in a rage, at their not answering to a second summons.

Jefferson shook his head, in a fashion that expressed more than words. Full arraigned to Fun's shake in country: adding, by way of commentary, "The Yankees are queer fish."

I waited for no more, feeling that this was, indeed, a ridiculous affair—the whole thing ridiculous. At some time, it served to account by for every possible reason, from the want of the common sense of the Yankees, the laziness of the fruit crop, the non-arrival of the packets, the raising of stock, and the "fixings" of the shoes.

Among my friends at the hotel—an exceeding's good one, by the way—we were soon once more in smoke and laughter, and a pleasant one we even allowed the smooth surface of the Potomac, off I walked with Jefferson, to Washington, to consult with us no way regretting my having visited Alexandria, or my disappointment in the pit seats, as I enjoyed the delightfully proud; and my not having a score of engagements to fulfil, as I had in the city, for a long, quiet, and intelligent person, to which I was but too much accustomed in my engagement to Mr. J. and no hopes of attending.

Departed this life in Lenawee county, Michigan Territory, on the 22d ult. Ruth Evans, late of this city, in the 30th year of her age, wife of Joseph Inskeep, and wishing for that change which would destroy her of those earthly shackles that kept her from a participation in that glorious immortality, which she felt she was soon about to enjoy. She manifested during her illness, that there was a rest prepared for her very far beyond the reach of pain, and that she was ready to receive and enjoy the reward of a well spent and virtuous life.

Should we not, like her, strive to stand in a state of preparation, that when the summons comes, we may be read to each of us, to an ambassador from Heaven, "prepare to meet thy God."

CORRECTION.

Panoramic spectacle of the Conflagration of Rome.

The interesting exhibition, which is advertised to be open this evening, at the Arcade, is one of great poetry.

It is intended this pleasing exhibition at the Amerti, can Museum, last evening, and can truly say that it is the most magnificent thing of the kind ever seen. It is interesting that we have ever witnessed. The time occupied in the scene is from the moment when Tigellinus, the prefect of the Pretorian army was marching into the city. The lights in the distance, the rolling of the drums, and the cries of the army and Moscow—the Imperial city—gradual, appears the illuminations on the city, and the burning of the houses upon its thousand spires and numerous palaces. The inhabitants rush out of the gates—surrender and with burning torches fly about the city—the raging element spreads from house to house—is carried to the street, when a more explodes which completes the ruin of the ill fated city.

It were useless to dwell on the particulars of the scene, suffice it to say that the representation calls up reminiscences of a thrilling nature, to every one familiar with the history of that eventful campaign. Thus exhibition is open to leave the city, and is worthy the inspection of all.

EPITOME OF THE TIMES.

We had another plentiful fall of snow on Wednesday last making, as we are informed, the 7th snow we have experienced during this winter. Our oldest citizens do not recollect a more general or intense cold, than for some weeks past. On Friday there was another fall of snow, making the 8th.

We learn that General Robert Patterson has purchased the new dwelling house, and the large lot of ground on Locust street, owned by Col. J. H. Powell. The dwelling is a princely mansion, and one of the most desirable in Philadelphia. The price of the whole, is said to be between sixty thousand and seventy thousand dollars.

At a meeting of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society, on Tuesday evening, 15th inst. Thomas Rhoads, Esq. was elected President, in place of George Vaux, deceased.

A Post-office has been established at Oak Hill, Lancaster county, Penn. and J. E. Taylor, appointed Postmaster.

It is said that there are orders now in England for nearly three hundred thousand tons of railroad iron, for the United States and the continent of Europe.

Duelling.—The editor of the Lexington Gazette states, that he had been informed, upon authority not to be doubted, that there is no truth, that several wagons in the vicinity of Lexington, have been employed, for the purpose of preventing the owners from hauling fire-wood to that city.

"Have you got any fish hooks?" said a gentleman the other day, to a boy in one of our market houses. "No, sir," replied the urchin, thinking the Sir should have been included in the answer, rejoined the boy—"Boston Transcript.

It will be seen that the banking house of the late Mr. Charles Morris, has failed for the sum of for upwards of $150,000. This may be considered a large failure, as it has been but a few months since, paid for the whole of these houses, and considered them as fixtures, not to be reckoned with capital stock.

Locality of Greatest Cold in the United States. In Vermont, on the 5th inst. the thermometer was at the limit of extreme cold in the United States. The quicksilver froze, Feb. 3d, stood at "one inch 40° below zero. It is believed the spirit thermometer stood at seventy-two degrees!

In the Legislature of Massachusetts, on Friday last, a petition was presented from Perkins & Co., Shark street, Natchez, for the loss of 1,736 others, for a Bank, with a capital of $1,000,000.

Boston and Strother.—The St. Louis Republican of January 21, states that the indictment pending in that Court against Boston & Strother, keeping a challenge to Col. Benton, was tried on the previous day. Col. Strother, the principal was absent, at Washington, at the time. After hearing the evidence and the charge of the Judge, the jury found a verdict of guilty, and assessed the damages at seventy-two dollars!

Mr. John Fash, of Josephs county, Ind. was killed on Wednesday morning the 10th instant, while in the act of cranking for ice from the mill wheel of his mill. It is supposed that the wheel started before he had disengaged the crank, and he was caught by it and crushed to death. Mr. F. was formerly a member of the State Legislature.

The Kennebec Journal notices as one of the most remarkable things, a horse race on the river, attended by "several thousand persons." Ice two inches thick.

The Journal of Commerce says:—"The old mode of intercourse between the States, is now extensively resorted to. Great numbers of sleds and sleighs are constantly arriving loaded with butter, cheese, and other produce, for exportation from places three or four hundred miles off—and the roads are full of them in all directions."

Tar Sweet.—The editor of the Jamaica Watchman, has received a letter from one of the people of the United States, and the subject of which, calls an answer from the editor. He says the demand for it was double last year what it ever was before, and he anticipates a similar increase during the coming season. A gentleman in Virginia, it is said, retires, rejoicen having made $1,000 per annum.

The Absconding Shaker.—The story of Mr. Shaker, of Shaker, lately stolen in the Zanesville Gazette, to have married one of the sisters of the land run away with a hundred thousand dollars is contradicted, in part at least, by the Cincinnati Gazette. True, he went off with the beloved sister; true, he married her, and took her to the land and fraud, if not the whole, of his offending. But he was not the owner of the property of some ten or twelve thousand dollars in dispute between him and the Society, when it is believed will soon be amicably adjusted. The sudden flight of the brother's wife, and him can have no legal claim to her. The story then, is not to be credited, both seem mightily magnified—you, greatly aggravated; and verily it grieveth us that indulged pleasure to set the matter right.

FLORIDA WAR.

A letter from St. Augustine, dated Feb. 9d, says:—" A company of mounted men came in from Fort Barron—they will act as guides to the expedition which will march in a few days from this place. They were met by the Indians, the last battle of the Withlacoochee, was fought, and four killed.

Gallant officer.—On the 12th inst. Colonel Parrish at the head of two hundred volunteers from this district, composed of the companies of Captains Alston, Bellamy, and Caswell, and a small detachment of the Light Infantry of Indians. The attack commenced with the advance guard of Capt. Bellamy, who had been detached for the enemy to pass their main body. Col. Parrish immediately ordered the rest of the command to engage; but the brushy nature of the ground soon rendered the cavalry useless and they dismounted and fought on foot. The Indians were driven from their position, and retreated in confusion. The volunteers made no unsuccessful attempt to charge on horseback—they were then dismounted and fought in admirable order. They then charged upon the enemy in a manner worthy of veterans. In the engagement Capt. Bellamy had received the attacking party opposed to him, fell back upon the main body, and the whole line proceeded to take shelter in a thicket. By this time, night was coming on, and it was deemed prudent to follow them, where the localities of the place and the darkness would have given them every advantage. Our own return to the encampments in the open pine woods, prepared to renew the attack in the morning, as the enemy and savages effected a retreat. These few must have been all that could attend to charge—there were counted in one part of the field of battle, the next days after Col. Parrish marched for Fort King, and arrived there in safety. He then proceeded to Powell's town and destroyed it. The Indians then retreated to Fort Drane, where they are now encamped.

Useful Regulations for Steamboats.—The Packet of the 16th inst. contains the following ordinance, dated the 9th of December, relative to fires on board of steamboats.

According to the tenor of this ordinance, the proprietors of vessels for this description of navigations are compelled to have on board of each vessel an engineer approved of by government. A water-hose is to be marked on the exterior of the vessel, and to lead it so as to exceed that line is prohibited. There is to be, at least, one small boat attached to each steamer, and every three months the inspecting officers are to make a very minute examination, independent of those which will be made daily. A register is also to be kept on board, in which travellers may write their observations. The captain and pilot are, moreover, required to give proof of their capabilities.

IMPORTANT MOVEMENT IN NEW JERSEY.

The Committee of the New Jersey Legislature which was referred the proposition of the Camden and Amboy Rail Road, and Delaware and Raritan Canal Companies, to sell their works to the State on certain conditions, have reported in favor of accepting the proposition, and brought in a bill to that effect, enabled, " An Act to extinguish the exclusive privileges of the Delaware and Raritan Canal, and the Camden and Amboy Rail Road." The Committee, in the report, express the acceptance of which it recommended by the Committee, offered to sell their rail-road and canal, with all property and rights appertaining thereto, for the sum of $7,500,000, to be paid to the stockholders in certificates of State stock bearing the interest of 5 per cent, per annum, payable half yearly and redeemable in not less than a given number of years. The Committee also recommend the acceptance of the offer of the Philadelphia and Trenton Rail Road Co. and the Trenton Bridge and the Brunswick Turnpike Co. to take a lease of the rail-road works for 26 years, at $450,000 per annum, in half yearly payments, being the interest of the amount of $7,500,000 at 6 per cent, and also to authorize and require the Trenton and New Brunswick Turnpike Company to construct a rail-road on their Turnpike, with such deviations as the nature of the ground may require, from the city of New Brunswick to the junction of Bridge at Trenton—such road to be completed in two years. The bill authorized a charge of 4¢ for every passenger, transported by day from New York to Philadelphia through the State of New Jersey, and 5¢ for every passenger transported by night; the Lessees, whenever the price shall be reduced on both parties of Friends, that the question has at last been settled in favor of the people, and that the New Jersey Legislature—by the provisions of which the property belonging to the Society of Friends at the time of the passage of the act of incorporation to the relative numbers of each party. It was passed by a vote of 30 to 16, and by the Council 13 to 2. This will of course put the government of the state, and that peaceably, for the next seven years.

The Weather.—New York is not the only place which suffers from the extreme cold of the season. "In Italy, so severe is the cold that the people say that their climate must have been changed. In Paris, the cold has been intense; and upon the Seine, where, during the winter, an unclouded sky is generally observed, no inconsiderable degree of inconvenience appears to be felt from the weather."

Little Monsters.—We learn from the Albany Argus that the Bank Committee of the Legislature of that State, have already reported in favor of the bill to incorporate the Commercial Bank of Oswego, capital $250,000: the Tompkins County Bank at Ithaca capital $250,000, and the City Bank of Rochester, capital $400,000, and to increase the capital of the Greenwich Bank in the city of New-York, $300,000.

It is estimated that the exports from New Orleans to Mexico will not fall short of sixteen millions to be authorized and secured by mortgages on real estate—the charter to cease for forty years.

The bank to be apportioned among the counties of the State and the city of Baltimore in an equitable ratio.

The principal bank to be in Baltimore, with five branches, to wit:—three on the Western Shore and one on the Eastern Shore, but the principal bank and each branch to be separate and distinct with reference to profits and liabilities.

The profits, as they accrue, to be made principal, and applied in extinguishment of the bonds, the surplus to be divided among the stock holders proportionably.

The directors to consist of a President and nine Directors at each bank, of whom the State shall appoint for the principal bank and two each for each of the branches.

The State shall have a general board: with revising and controlling powers, to be composed of the presidents of the principal bank and branches, and two of the directors from each institution, five of whom to form a quorum to do business, and with reference to the due observance of the principal board and branches, and to hold stated meetings at the principal bank once annually, and to adjourn from time to time as the business of the bank may require.

No loan, or discount other than on mortgage to be made, and usurious accrued by any officer, or some collateral pledge other than personal, to be taken, and the usual pecuniary penalties for unreasonable accommodations or usurious discount, and for exchanging their estates, may effect such transfer and discharge by furnishing a satisfactory mortgage upon other lands; or, in case $300 stock-holder shall desire to obtain a release of his property, he may do so by depositing the amount of the bonds, or lawful money of the United States to the amount of his stock, and receive a certificate therefor.

Remarkable Fact.—In the last number of Silliman's Journal, is an article "On Cotton in Water," it is asserted that if a tub or other vessel be filled with water, and a bale made into the middle of the bottom to discharge it, the water will occupy a rotary motion from the South, or opposed to the apparent motion of the sun, and if corrugs are used to produce an opposite motion,

MATHEMATICAL QUESTION.

Three-fifths of one-fourth, of three-fifths of five score
One-third of twenty, doubled by four;
One-half of two-thirds of an score then fourthrees,
Three-fourths of eight dimes, half eight if you please.
The sounds of these, when joined you will spy,
A thing which this nonsense, is under your eye.
A solution is required.

PARLEY BAS-

Parley bas! The music is up,
And o'er the sleepy throng,
The mocking bird's high notes are heard
In wild interwoven song.
No eye shall trace thy footsteps here,
But fair time as while love is near.

Parley bas! Though here we meet,
In silence deep, silent,
No guilty thoughts disturb our soul,
Nor wish we fear to own
Pure as the light you orb imparts,
Shall be the meeting of our hearts.

Parley bas! A genial breath
Is wandering o'er earth's flowers,
Their fragrance whose touch awoke by voice,
And lent joy is ours.
Parley bas! And let each tone
Echo the fondness of none own.

Parley bas! And now repeat
The vow these lips once spoke;
Mine as a love that ever not change,
A heart that ne'er betrayed.
O! say that thou will love me still,
Through storm or sunshine, good or ill.

Parley bas! I bless thy words,
The last that I may hear!
Sweet on my bosom thy breath I feel,
Upon my cheek thy tear.
Now take that to the bed and rest,
And be thou blest, as I am blest.

Speak love!

A Love-Lighted Eye.

I have gold in my coffers, 'tis good and 'tis bright,
I have gems in my case would dismiss the night,
I have steeds on the run, and steeds in the stall,
But the dark eye of beauty is better than all.

Gold and gems fall away like the leaves from the tree!
They were yours, they are mine, now they're settled on me;
The gallery fill perish, the coursers will die,
But memory shines in a love-lighted eye.

A gentleman meeting one of his friends who was insolvent, inquired, with sincere regret, for his embarrassment. "You are mistaken, sir dear Sir," was the reply. "I'm not I, 'tis my creditors who are embarrassed."

THE VERY LAST.—"Grandman," said an urchin to his father's brother, the other day, "is you somewhere in Worcester." "Grandman, the Railroad is coming through our town?" "Is it, Nick?" said the uncle to the lad. "Well, I hope it will come through by daylight, for I long to see one terribly."

A friend has commissioned us to ask the following question, copied from a broadside, at a hotel in Kendig, intended to be sent to Merrimack, Lebanon county:

"Do Barn Brooks Hum To goo out to Mayans Noam to John Steele and keped dat teil Mr. John Steele I hold I am der."

MODESTY.—Modesty is not only an ornament, but also a guard to virtue. It is a kind of quick sense, like that of the soul, which makes her shrink and withdraw herself from every thing that has danger in it. It is such an exquisite sensibility that it warns her to shun the first appearance of every thing that is hurtful.

Sed a Pipe, "though I ascot, you're a smoker,

HAPPY FOR.—A gentleman who was blessed with a fund of unusual humour on was once asked by a friend, if he had a loose of that mouth of his. "No," said humourously repeated the other, "I have it only from year to year."

EXTREMELY POLITE.—A young widow of very polite notions, who buried her lately dead, was requested soon after by the minister of the parish, who inquired as usual about her living husband, whom she resided, with a peculiar smile, "He is dead, I thank you."

"Milk is so dear," exclaimed a young widow to her milkman, for the twentieth time at least; "I wish I could afford to keep a cow of my own." "I wish it be cheaper, ma," replied her little daughter, wishing to keep a milkman of your own."

AN EXCELLENT JOKE.—Our readers are aware that the ingenious fellows who pursue the tentative profession of smuggling goods between that State and its neighboring provinces, are often driven to exercise a good deal of tact, in order to elude the officers stationed on each side of the line. A trick occurred a few years since, which is worth recording. A custom house officer stationed on the American side, had rendered himself obnoxious to the smuggling party, in his professional duty-ness, and a council was held by those who were on the habit of transporting some forbidden commodities to the States, as to the means by the unbalanced efforts of this worthy that they were resolved to try if he could not be caught in his own trap. For this purpose they procured a large cask, with a cover which inserted down with a pad-lock. In the bottom a quantity of lamp-black was strewed, and some brandy put on the top. In this condition they journeyed on, until the first mentioned officer, clad on the alert, met them, and demanded that they wagon containing the cask, should be searched. After a parley, in which the smugglers appeared rather shy, their authority mounted the wagon—the cover was lifted up, and he perceived the lamp- black. Thinking there was without doubt, no nothing worth while at the bottom, he leaned over the edge and commenced searching with his hand. The smugglers perceiving that their opportunity had come, tripped up his heels and in went the astonished officer, lawning out over. The rascals quickly put down the cover, and drove off with at a single bait, until they were ten miles from where they had taken in their fresh provisions.

At length the hopeful John drove up to a tavern door, and asked the landlord if he would let them have some dinner, and take her pay in coarse home goods. Business agreed, though no doubt he supplied with something useful from the wagon of the smugglers, whom he knew to be fond of home truth. Dinner was procured, the horses were fed, and the wagon was brought to the door. The landlord appeared, to get his pay from the cash, when the disconsolated officer was let the free upon entreated to the liberance his incarceration. The Lynn-block, together with the lodging of the wagon, had placed the poor fellow in a pickle that in the only convicted that described. The landlord "enjoyed the joke," pronounced it a good 'un, and away drove the smugglers as hard as a score of horses could carry them, leaving the landlord and each-in house officer to console themselves the best way they could. It is needless to remember the best way they could. It is needless to remember the best way they could. It is needless to remember
